John,

1. I told you I would let you know as soon as we heard from the General Services Administration (GSA) on the Real Property Reporting System. It appears that their directions caused such a stir among the agencies that the Administrator has decided to defer the publication of a Federal Property Management Regulation (FPMR). This FPMR would have required quarterly reporting of real property assets. GSA has decided, at least for the time being, to continue the annual reporting. This means for our purposes the first report will be due on 31 May 1983. It will cover real property holdings as of 31 March 1983. I believe we can comply with this part of the request.

2. The changes that are requested under the proposed FPMR for reporting in future years incorporate a number of data elements which give us cause for concern. For instance, we have never reported the number of people occupying our spaces. It's not our intention to begin to do this now. The individual that I spoke with indicated that GSA is sending out another letter of instruction which we should receive sometime soon. This letter should give further guidance on how agencies are to proceed with these reports. But again, we do not expect to comply with any report which requires us to submit personnel data. I told my GSA contact that the data elements they were asking for did give us a problem. He told me that he had anticipated as much.

3. In the meantime, any report we do submit to GSA will be as bland as any of those we have submitted up to this point. I'll keep you informed if there are any further developments.
